

Sudafrica

An aerial photograph of a dramatic coastline in South Africa. The image shows a series of layered, reddish-brown rock formations that have been eroded into a series of steps and ledges. The ocean is a deep blue, with white foam from waves crashing against the base of the cliffs. A narrow, crescent-shaped sandy beach is visible at the bottom right, nestled between the rock formations. The foreground is filled with dark green, dense vegetation, likely coastal shrubs. The overall scene is one of natural beauty and geological complexity.
